

Frac Sand Sentinel

...keeping watch on the industry

Issue: #34

DATE:

June 12, 2014

All readers who want to become more enlightened about the frac sand industry and how it is treated as an issue in Iowa, Minnesota, and Wisconsin are invited to read this report! You will note the sharp contrast made between the states in the way environmental as well as economic concerns are approached. There are many references in this report to back up this “white paper” written for those concerned or unaware of frac sand issues.

Aaron Kline and David Osterberg from the University of Iowa wrote the report entitled:

Authors and Acknowledgments

Aaron Kline is a graduate student intern from the University of Iowa School of Urban and Regional Planning. His focus is land use and environmental planning. He holds a bachelor's degree in political science from the University of Iowa, and subsequently worked at the university in research on agricultural safety and health.

David Osterberg is a Professor in the Department of Occupational and Environmental Health in the University of Iowa College of Public Health. A former state legislator who chaired the Iowa House Energy and Environmental Protection Committee and Agriculture Committee during his six terms, he also has served as a consultant to the Iowa Department of Natural Resources. He holds masters degrees in water resources management and agricultural economics from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. In 2001, Osterberg co-founded the Iowa Policy Project and served as executive director through June 2013. He remains on the staff as a researcher on energy and environmental issues.

We gratefully acknowledge the generous support of the Fred and Charlotte Hubbell Foundation, which made the preparation of this report possible. While these funders support the research that went into this report, they may not necessarily agree with policy recommendations that are included. Policy recommendations are solely the perspective of the authors and the Iowa Policy Project.

The Iowa Policy Project

Formed in 2001, the Iowa Policy Project is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization. Its principal office is at
